

Syracuse University

Computer and Internet Usage Notice

The purpose of this form is to make parents aware that Syracuse University, as an institution of higher learning committed to academic freedom, does not block access to websites containing content that may be objectionable. Syracuse University is not responsible for material viewed or downloaded by your child, nor for material that may be inappropriate for minors, such as material sent to a computer lab or printer or brought in by another computer lab user. As parents/guardians, you should know that many accessible sites and material may be offensive, objectionable, or sexually explicit. Syracuse University is not responsible for any potential activity that may occur from the extension of this right to Internet access and the right of your child to use the information technology resources of Syracuse University. Users of the University's computer and Internet resources are bound by the policies outlined on line at its.syr.edu. It is the responsibility of your child to use Syracuse University information technology resources responsibly and in line with any and all Syracuse University technology usage and policy guidelines and in accordance with federal, state, and local laws.

Please review the policies and guidelines and discuss them with your child. Syracuse University reserves the right to change any policies or guidelines without prior notice. All summer computer user accounts expire after the Summer College program has ended for the year.